Lies on Secretary Blaine Officially Exposed—An Important Mining Decision—Changes in Telegraph Management at Chicago.

[illegible]

Telegraph Changes.

[illegible], May 29.—[illegible] the W. U. Co. in Chicago [illegible] Frank A. Armstrong, have [illegible] It seems [illegible] out gradually all the [illegible] as soon as they can be supplanted with [illegible] a parent detriment to the company. Most Contemptible.

[illegible] attempt has been made this year [illegible] Clapp, catcher of the Cleveland ball club, which is given to the public as the only means of punishing the offender. His name is J. S. Woodruff who formerly kept a bankrupt store on State street, and lately, judging by the letter-heads he uses, has been hanging around "the store" a place kept by Mike McDonald. Clapp has received several letters on the subject of selling games which he handed to manager Evans of the Cleveland club. He in turn put the case into Pinkerton's hands. Woodruff sent Clapp a hundred dollar note as pay for a game which he supposed had [illegible] and furnished him with a cypher by means of which they were to communicate and pluck the [illegible]. The little [illegible] conspiracy came [illegible] when Pinkerton presented the man with a scathing rebuke from Clapp, and added [illegible] words of reprobation of the swindle which has been unearthed.

Vanderbilt on Railroad Matters.

NEW YORK, May 29.—Wm. H. Vanderbilt [illegible] from Europe today. To a reporter he said: I have not sold any Lake Shore stock for more than a year. I have bought some but sold none. Referring to published reports that the Lake Shore had secured control of the Lake Erie and Western and that there was a difference between it and the Wabash on account of shipments by the latter company by way of Erie, Vanderbilt said he had no knowledge of them. When asked about rumored cutting of rates on east bound freight he replied: "I would not be surprised if there was something of the kind going on."

The New York Walking Match.

The walk ended to-night with the following score: Vint, 578½ miles; Sullivan, 569; Hughes, 523; Fitzgerald, [illegible]; Howard, 518½; Donovan, 500½; Clow, 502; Hazel, 500; Littlewood, 483½; Dufrane, 482; and Curran, 480½.

A relief party was sent from Leadville on the 16th and returned to-day. They report rescuing Mythus and party [illegible] that they were very weak, having had nothing to eat but fresh meat for thirty-one days.

An Important Mining Case.

DENVER, May 28.—The [illegible] Mining Co. vs the Smuggler [illegible] verdict to-day in favor of the defendant. It appears that the location of the two claims were [illegible] Plaintiffs made the first location, but [illegible] patent [illegible] In 1879 the owners of the [illegible] a shaft to [illegible] the vein [illegible] of mineral in which they [illegible] rich body of mineral [illegible] reaching the [illegible] of the Smuggler shaft [illegible] claiming that the apex of the vein was [illegible] inside of their patented location. The [illegible] The trial lasted a week. Numerous witnesses were examined [illegible] The case excited great interest and the result [illegible] to the owners of the Iron Mining Co. NEW YORK, May 29.—The Lincoln statue near the main entrance of Prospect park, Brooklyn, was dedicated this afternoon in the presence of 5,000 persons.

The Situation at Las Pinos.

LAS PINOS, May 29.—Yesterday being ration day nearly all the Indians came to the agency. All are well armed and their ponies are in excellent condition. The Indians seem in good humor and there are no present indications of danger, but there is no telling what may transpire when time for removal arrives. The course to be pursued by the commission is undecided, but probably the commissioners, with a large escort of cavalry and a number of Indians, will start within a week to select a new reservation.

Fire at Chicago.

CHICAGO, May 28.—The furniture manufactory of [illegible] Colley, corner Ashland and Sunnyside avenue, burned to-night; loss on stock, building and house adjoining, $250,000; only small insurance.

Reasons for the Testament Revision.

[illegible], May 29.—Dr. Philip Schaff, chairman of the American section of the Bible revision committee addressed a large audience here today on the revised testament. After briefly reviewing the different translations made from time to time the speaker said that for 40 years there had been a growing demand for a new translation. The reasons for such a revision were two. 1st. Changes in language. 2d. Progress in biblical scholarship. Every living language changes from time to time. Certain words have changed their meaning to the direct opposite of what they formerly expressed such as "prevent" used in the sense of "precede," "carriages" for "baggage," and "by and by" for "forthwith." The most important, however, is the growth of knowledge. The forty-seven men who made King James' translation had none of them been in Palestine and knew little of biblical geography, and they were thus liable to make mistakes and did make many. Since Egypt has given up her treasures, researches explored Palestine traversed, Babylon and Nineveh rises from their graves to testify to the truth of the Bible and render their manuscripts and inscriptions to the explanation of some of its passages. Older manuscripts since discovered have been used in the present revision and many actual errors rectified. "Strain at a gnat" has been changed to "Strain out a gnat" and a great many such typographical errors corrected. Two words in original were both translated Hell, in King James' version, Hades meaning the abode of souls after death, and Gehenna meaning the abode of the damned. In the revision these have been corrected. So also has a distinction between devil and demon been made. The division into chapters first made by a Roman Catholic cardinal in the 13th century, and that into verses first made by a Paris publishing house in the 16th, have been done away with and the text divided according to the sense. Italicized passages which they [illegible] and weakening to the true sense, have been discarded.

Indian Troubles Threatened.

HUNNEWELL, Kan., May 30.—Frontiersmen anticipate Indian trouble. The North Cheyennes have notified agent Miller that they must be permitted to depart in peace within twenty days or they will go forcibly. They say that they cannot live in the country allotted them, and will return to their old homes.

The president and cabinet will visit the Soldiers' Home Monday A. M., and afterwards attend decoration ceremonies at Arlington.

The Treasury Spring Cleaning.

It is reported that the president intends to [illegible] Monday to suspend treasury officials who have been connected with the misdeeds of the custodian's office. Inquiries as to the truth of the report at the White House and from high officials in the treasury were responded to by a declination to either affirm or deny the report. It is said that Garfield learned of the waste of public money and wrong doing in the custodian's office while serving in the last congress, and that he has insisted upon investigation, that he proposes to suspend officials alleged to form the ring, in order to give the investigation committee free field to carry on their labors. That the president and Secretary Windom have been so entirely occupied with other important questions, is said to be the reason for not having earlier ordered suspension of treasury officials.

Slanders Stopped.

Attorney General MacVeagh and Postmaster General [illegible] a final quietus on rumors about Secretary Blaine's visit to New York and the [illegible]. Rumors had taken all sorts of [illegible] that MacVeagh had returned to [illegible] Today, in [illegible] to put down [illegible] the attorney general over [illegible] what the [illegible] developed in the star [illegible] with [illegible] pronounced [illegible] MacVeagh's [illegible] false. Ordinarily [illegible] but this one has [illegible] persistently kept alive and repeated, even after its falsity was declared, that it was [illegible] to silence it emphatically.

Virginia Politics.

The president and Secretaries Windom and Blaine have had their attention called to Virginia politics to-day, by conflicting delegations. Postmaster Wilson of [illegible], headed a delegation of republicans, who [illegible] a straight republican campaign in Virginia. Wilson states that the president and both secretaries favored holding a republican convention and if the readjusters want to unite with the republicans on the terms proposed by the convention, let them do it, but that the republican party must not be [illegible]. Senator Mahone and several leading readjusters also called on the president and Windom and Blaine, to urge the administration to [illegible] the favor of [illegible] of the republicans with [illegible]. But the administration did not [illegible] Mahone state. Mahone is [illegible] that he will make a straight readjuster [illegible] at the head for governor, and will [illegible] of [illegible] vote with him, and [illegible] the republican party.

Gambetta talks Sensibly.

PARIS, May 29.—Gambetta, speaking at a banquet at Cahors [illegible] condemned the attempt to create antagonism between himself and President Grevy, whom he highly eulogized. Alluding to the constitution, he admitted that it was not perfect and would have to be perfected in a democratic sense, but he warned against doing this hastily. He cited the precautions taken by Americans in this respect and urged the necessity of waiting until the institutions had struck [illegible] completed their revolutions. Attempts to revise the constitution would shake their foundation.

RAILROAD MATTERS.

Mr. Villard's Position Regarding the Northern Pacific and Other Enterprises.

The Chicago Tribune of May 28 has the following special from New York concerning Mr. Villard's statements at the meeting of the Northern Pacific board the day before and other matters:

Mr. Villard was asked to state his views as to the future operation of the Northern Pacific company. He complied with the request at some length, saying that he spoke as a large stockholder who desired to remain and to cooperate with the party, and not to injure it. A great deal had been published in the newspapers about his alleged hostility to the Cascade branch, the line from the mouth of Snake river to Tacoma, on Puget sound. He wished to say that he was not and never had been opposed to building that branch, nor was he opposed to the building of any branch, or to any policy which was for the pecuniary interest of the Northern Pacific stockholders. His own interests in the Northern Pacific railroad were much larger than his interests in any other company, and it was ridiculous to suppose that he would set himself in opposition to any line of policy which could be shown to be advantageous to the company. He thought, however, that the building of the line from Portland to Kalama, the gap which still remains to be closed between Tacoma and the Oregon Railway & Navigation Company's lines, should be first undertaken. This gap was only sixty miles long, and when finished would supply railway communication between Puget sound and the Pend d'Oreille division of the road, now nearly completed.

After the conclusion of Mr. Villard's remarks the board adopted a resolution providing for the immediate construction of the line between Portland and Kalama. On motion, it was resolved to construct the Cascade branch as soon as practicable. After desultory conversation of a harmonious character, the board adjourned.

Mr. Villard now has a controlling interest in Northern Pacific stock, and the Northern Pacific road is in entire harmony with his views as to the relations between that company and the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company. Mr. Villard and his friends have recently acquired the Oregon and California lines running south from Portland in the valley of the Willamette river, and these are to be extended southward to connect with the California and Oregon railroad so as to form a connection with San Francisco by rail. This system has already 360 miles of railway in operation, 230 on the east bank and 130 on the west bank. Under the plan of reorganization adopted at Frankfort-on-the-Main a few days ago, a new loan of $6,000,000 was obtained on the security of these 360 miles in operation and of the extension proposed to be built, and work will be proceeded with immediately.

CURRENT NOTES AND NEWS.

If Mr. Conkling should be taken at his word and another man elected in his place, wouldn't there be a roar of laughter from Maine to California?

Secretary Blaine's report on the Great American Hog has been widely misunderstood as having been prepared with special reference to the present crisis.

Gen. Walker, superintendent of the census, says that the forthcoming report of the census, complete in all the details, will be seven times as large as the report of 1870.

The deposits in the several National Banks at Chicago amounted to $48,759,452, an increase of over 100 per cent. in two years. "This increase," says the Inter-Ocean, "has not been sudden, but steady and regular."

The granddaughters of Capt. William Pickett, of the Revolutionary army, desire the government to purchase the mammoth punch-glass, holding over a gallon, which their ancestor captured, filled with hot whisky punch, from some British officers at Yorktown.

At a dinner with Farragut, after the meal was over, a smoking bishop, about to select a cigar, offered the bunch to Farragut. "Have a cigar, Admiral?" said he. "No, Bishop," said the Admiral, with a critical glance, "I don't smoke. I swear a little sometimes."

There is probability of another short harvest in England, where there has been none up to the average of harvest since 1874. Should this appreh[illegible] prove true there will be much distress among laborers, small incomes among landholders, and an increased demand for American agricultural products. Emigration will also be stimulated.

Grand Dukes Michael and Alexis and Prince Suwarrow have been appointed executors of the last will and testament of the late czar. The will is said to declare that 18,000,000 of roubles are on deposit with English bankers, and provide that 30,000,000 of that sum shall be paid to the [illegible] and the remainder to the Princess D[illegible]

Persons in the vicinity of Piscataway, near New Brunswick, New Jersey, are [illegible] that they have discovered Capt. Kidd's buried treasure. The stern frame of a vessel in which a number of ancient coins have been found has been discovered in Walker's creek. An organized attempt will be made to [illegible] the money, and a guard is placed over the wreck every night to prevent depredations.

INHERITED VANITY.

[From the Cincinnati Gazette.]

Conkling's conceit and big vanity [illegible] by heredity. It is told of his father, Judge Conkling, who was an able and pure man, that he did not permit his wife or children to [illegible] any other title, after he had secured it, than that of Judge. This vanity intensified and the exaggerated dignity have descended to Senator Conkling, and therefore we say perhaps he can not help his infirmity.

If your throat feels sore or uncomfortable, use promptly Dr. Jayne's Expectorant. It will relieve the air-passages of all phlegm or mucus, allay inflammation and so give the affected parts a chance to heal. No safer remedy can be had for all coughs and colds, or any complaint of the throat or lungs, and a brief trial will prove its efficacy.

They have a book war in the New York legislature; but it is a dictionary war. Some of the solons are for Webster, some for Worcester. In Oregon we readily compromise such small matters by adopting both.

[illegible]

That Man from Maine.

NEW YORK, May 29.—Conkling [illegible] saturday that there was nothing to be [illegible] withdrawing, and having gone so far he [illegible] to fight it out. A member of the state committee living outside the city who called upon Conkling yesterday and afterwards talked with a Tribune reporter, was bitter in denunciations of "that man from Maine." This committeeman said that this fight is not against Garfield, but against that man from Maine. Garfield is all right. The question with Conkling is whether he shall allow Blaine to manage the party in this state. Blaine has been able to carry Maine in September, and then rush over here and interfere with Conkling, and then go to Pennsylvania and make speeches and attempt to undermine Cameron, and again in Illinois he did the same thing with Logan. He did succeed in defeating Carpenter in Wisconsin, and he interfered in the same way with Morton in Indiana.

Troublesome Questions.

NEW YORK, May 29.—The question of whether or not the legislature will be compelled to remain in session and ballot continuously for senators until successors to Conkling and Platt are chosen was discussed yesterday by adherents of the administration and the ex-senator. In case of a deadlock, two courses seem open. One is for the legislature to adjourn with the understanding that the governor will call an extra session late in September or early in October, when both may be resumed, or to have no extra session and allow vacancies to be filled by the legislature to be chosen in November. The danger of the latter course is that in many assembly and senatorial districts there would be two republican candidates and the next legislature would be democratic. This is a contingency which the administration members do not like to contemplate, and it is doubtful if they will agree to adjourn unless they have assurance from the governor that he will call them together again. Suggestions that a recess shall be taken for three or four months is met by a statement that it would endanger the legality of the election of senators, and this is a [illegible] risk that it is not deemed advisable to take. A speech from Conkling is expected during this week.

THE NORTHWEST.

Washington Territory.

The Seattle public schools closed last Friday for the summer vacation.

Louis Tellier, one of the first settlers of Walla Walla valley, died at his home there on the 21st of May, aged 72 years.

The Seabeck mill company received an order from some railroad company in California for 1,500,000 feet of lumber last week.

The O. & T. railroad took into Olympia two hundred thousand feet of logs last week from Bush & Turner's camp, near Bush prairie. This is the largest week's work yet accomplished on that road.

Governor Newell made his regular visit of inspection to the penitentiary at Seatco last week. There are about forty inmates of that institution at present. A large and comfortable hospital has recently been built [illegible] on the grounds.

Ten schooners are engaged in the fur seal fishery off Cape Flattery, and the catch so far has been [illegible] five thousand seals. The season will last [illegible] three or four weeks longer, but during that time it will be at its best, and the catch will no doubt be [illegible] of the cost.

A Centerville correspondent says: The [illegible] Enterprise mine is [illegible] ore [illegible] barrel, having passed through two feet of very hard cement, then four feet of fine gravel, and are now in blue clay. They are having quite a flow of water to contend with. CONKLING AND PLATT.

And everything that Roscoe did
This man would sure do that.

And made the people laugh and [illegible]

Sound. The laws of trade operating according to fixed mathematical rules, determine each question without the least regard to the owner of [illegible] or the property of the parties. Here as the present, there the consumer, between these two commerce always tracks the channel that is the shortest and offers the least obstruction will flow. It is simply a matter of dollars and cents, where business can be transacted the cheapest, and with greatest dispatch. In a calculation of this kind, if every factor entering into it were known as to its magnitude, the result could easily be obtained. Such is not the case, however. Natural conditions [illegible] of man are continuously at work [illegible] moving the factors, so that no more than a general estimate can be formed.

As between Portland and the [illegible] Sound, it is necessary to consider the natural advantages of each of access to the sea and to the interior, and also advantages artificially created or disadvantages removed.

The first question is with reference to the [illegible] and [illegible] large [illegible] cargoes at the Sound [illegible] cheaper than at Portland. As Portland [illegible] to the ocean than any rival port on the Sound, and, moreover, is [illegible] journey farther south, this circumstance is slightly in favor of Portland.

The harbor of Portland and the facilities afforded for shipping are, to all practical purposes, equal [illegible]. The approach to this harbor is by way of the Columbia, with its bar and several shallow places to the Sound port by a deep channel [illegible] miles in width. Towage and pilotage is always necessary on the Columbia, and on the Sound may occasionally be avoided. So far as sailing vessels are concerned, the advantage would rest with the Sound. Bearing in mind, however, the fact that the obstructions on the river and at its mouth will [illegible] be removed, that steam is driving the sail rapidly from the sea, and that it is demonstrated by a long experience that the Columbia is as safe for large ocean steamers as other ports, the natural advantages of the Sound disappear.

The second question is as to the cheapness and dispatch in business with the interior. Here Portland has a decided advantage. Situated at the junction of two large and navigable rivers and the prospective railroad center, she has a position [illegible] absolutely the trade of the Willamette valley and the bulk of the upper [illegible]. Portland [illegible] reach the great interior by boat and rail better than any competing city on the [illegible] Under the [illegible] she will have no competition for everything [illegible]. All the growing commerce must [illegible] at this place [illegible] position of wealth, power and population, which will be hard to contend with. Even if, after several years, the eastern railroad connection should be built by way of the N. P. R. R. and the U. P., and the main [illegible] of the N. P. should [illegible] to [illegible] this would only [illegible] portion of the trade from Portland. The U. P. can [illegible] the business [illegible] to Astoria. It cannot [illegible] with the O. R. & N. [illegible] down the [illegible] to Portland [illegible] the advantage lies with Portland, as the [illegible] will have [illegible] the goods and produce [illegible] can [illegible] to Portland than [illegible] and [illegible]

[illegible] rivalry between Portland and [illegible] place on the Columbia [illegible]

[illegible]

Southern [illegible] the superior facilities of communication with the interior and the advantage in having a good start, point unmistakably to Portland as the great metropolis of the future. The sooner this is admitted, the sooner all the bickering and barking at her progress is ceased, the better it will be for the whole community.

[illegible] Sound, [illegible] Wallingford [illegible] population [illegible] San Francisco [illegible] the whole [illegible] she would have a population [illegible]

Then the question naturally arises: At what point will this great metropolis be established? The answers under the bias of interest and association vary considerably, but may be summed up in this, that it will be either on the Columbia river or Puget Sound.

No other such loathsome, treacherous and undermining malady curses mankind. Dr. Wei De Meyer's Catarrh Cure absorbs the purulent virus and kills the seeds of poison in the farthest parts of the system. It will not only relieve, but certainly cure Catarrh at any stage. It is the only remedy which in our judgment has ever yet really cured a case of Chronic Catarrh.

CLEAR CASE OF REBELLION.

When Senator Conkling and sub-Senator Platt resigned they entertained no doubt that they would be re-elected at once. The course they have pursued during a week past shows convincingly that they had in view the triumph of a re-election. For this imagined advantage they deserted their posts and left their party a minority in the senate. Mr. Conkling went up to the legislature. He thought it necessary only to strike an attitude, issue his orders in imperious tones and with lordly waving of the hand, and all men would fall down before him. But the hope of his "prompt vindication" began to vanish. Then from command he descended to expostulation, and next to entreaty; but he begged and besought, as he had previously threatened and commanded, in vain. Having now ascertained that the legislature is resolved to take him at his word and allow him and the man who represented his other vote in the senate to remain out of the body which they deserted, he proposes to join his followers in the legislature with the democrats, force adjournment without an election, and stake his last chance on getting a more subservient assembly through the general election next fall. This desperate throw will be as futile as his late endeavor. By it he puts in peril the ascendency of his party, without the smallest chance of personal success. Should the republicans again carry the legislature his opponents would still be strong enough to beat him; but the overwhelming probability is that the expedient would give the legislature and both senators to the democrats. But for this he cares little. His whole conduct presents him in a character so intensely selfish and so thoroughly contemptible that hopeless ruin is before him, no matter what turn he may take, or what may be the course of events independent of his own further action.

What has happened is a happy riddance for the republican party of Mr. Conkling, and this by his own act. Grass will grow and water will run as heretofore, though it may be a great surprise to the "boss" to see it. No party is ever destroyed by abandonment of it by any ambitious and haughty leader who proposes to leave it to its fate because can not force it to respond to his own imperious will. Of this the history of all parties furnishes illustrations enough. By the self-immolation of Mr. Conkling the republican party gains several things of value. One is the complete overthrow of "bossism," with its unit rule, its gag system and other appliances for stifling free expression of sentiment in the party. Conkling's retirement also signalizes the abolition of the system under which a political leader, through activity and dexterity in manipulating official patronages attains to control of primaries and caucuses, to the virtual suppression of popular sentiment and the building up of his own dictatorship. Another thing gained is the final defeat of the third-term project. The New York boss is the chief representative and exponent of this doctrine, upon which the republican party has several times expressly stamped its disapproval. As matter of fact, the present difficulty is only a continuation of the fight made a year ago at Chicago for the third term scheme, the gag law, the absolute dominion of caucus, and the unit rule. But it is the expiring effort of this struggle for despotism in party management; not a hopeful, aggressive and victorious movement to re-establish it. Conkling led the fight at Chicago for the unit rule, the party gag, the domination of caucuses, the third term, senatorial dictation, the spoils doctrine and the whole system embraced in the methods of machine politics. He and the system were beaten. Garfield, who was among its opponents, was nominated for the presidency; and Conkling, beaten in the contest at the national convention carried the struggle to the seat of government. Disregarding the principles asserted in the national convention, he insisted that Robertson should not be appointed to office because the latter had been one of those who had fought for the rights of district representation against "boss" tyranny and dictation. Yet this right of district representation was expressly affirmed by the convention, and by a series of resolutions was made an irrevocable law of the party. The whole spirit in which Conkling has acted is in direct rebellion against the declared will of the party and the laws it has instituted for its own regulation and government. An appeal may as well be made to the republicans of New York. We shall see what sort of "vindication" Conkling will have after the people have cast their ballots on the issue he has forced. Even with his packed jury, the present legislature, he has no chance. Still less will be his chance in a direct appeal to the people. His followers may have strength enough to hand the legislature over for the time to the democrats; but that will be the extent of their ability to serve or avenge him.

Mr. Conkling is simply a rebel against his party, its principles and its methods. As he claims to be a party man, he should have acquiesced in its declared will. He is on the wrong side of every question settled by the party in its last national convention. His attitude therefore is that of a rebel, and consequently he falls under the ban which he has been so fond of pronouncing upon others.

AN UNPROMISING REPORT.

Cincinnati papers publish a report furnished by Mr. John M. Wilson of that city, who has recently returned from Panama, on the French canal scheme and the progress of the work. Nothing worthy of notice, he says, has yet been done. About one hundred French surveyors are on the ground, and one hundred Jamaica negroes; and this represents the entire force employed. The surveyors are running lines and the negroes are clearing away brush and undergrowth. No start has been made in actual digging, and no one who sees what is going on is convinced that the company are in earnest. The expectations of large expenditures on the arrival of the French have not been realized. The line of the canal is a malarial one, in which nobody can live but Jamaica negroes and Chinamen, and the latter commit suicide in squads through homesickness. The scheme of the canal contemplates dividing the line of forty-five miles into six sections, each to be proceeded with as a separate work. Part of the excavations will be through mountains 350 feet above the surface of the canal, and the cuts will be solid stone. The course of the Chagres river is to be changed, which will require a wall of solid masonry seventy feet high and more than a mile and a half long. The Panama railroad is to be bought as part of the enterprise, but negotiations for the purchase which were undertaken on a basis of $20,000,000 for the road were not successful. During the wet season men cannot work there, and in the dry season the heat reaches 125 to 140 degrees. Altogether, a laborer cannot do half the work he would do in a more favorable climate. What with the payment for the railroad, the sum stolen by the treasurer of the company, and the paucity of the work a man can do there for the money paid him, it does not seem that the $30,000,000 estimated as the cost of the canal would do more than make a fair beginning; but if this company really had that sum to spend on the work, there might be some hope of success, because it is likely that the additional cash required could be had if the expenditure of that sum should demonstrate the feasibility of the plan; and any plan is feasible if money enough is spent on it. But the trouble is the company hasn't so much money, and is not likely ever to have even half of it; so that whatever the probability of a ship canal at this point may be in the future, it is not likely to be constructed from this beginning. Altogether this report differs very remarkably from the rosewater bulletins furnished from time to time by the projectors at Paris.

RATHER STARTLING CONCLUSIONS

In April last the noted English magazine "The Nineteenth Century" had an article said to have been written by a staff officer of the Austrian army, on "The Military Position of Great Britain." The same magazine for May has an article by Admiral Lord Dunsany on the British navy. This last article is entitled "The Silver Streak," and is devoted to exploding the common English notion that the silver streak of ocean, in plain words, the English channel, forms an insurmountable barrier to the invasion of England. The conclusions reached by the Austrian soldier and the British sailor are identical. The point of the former's article is that while the policy of Great Britain, outside of Europe, is distinctly and necessarily an aggressive and aggrandizing policy, the military resources, in which he includes the naval resources of the empire, are absolutely inadequate to maintain such a policy should it be seriously challenged by any first-class power. It is his opinion, in support of which he marshals a striking array of figures, that in the event of a general war Great Britain not only could not defend the outlying possessions which she has been at such pains to acquire, but could not offer any very formidable resistance to an invasion of her own shores and to the capture of the British capital, which would be the virtual ending of the war, as the capture of Paris was the virtual ending of the war between France and Germany. It is singular to observe that the English writer reaches the same conclusion. He believes that the insular position of Great Britain, instead of now being a defense, would only facilitate an invasion, and that a foreign fleet could even now, without fear of destruction by such British men of war as could be brought against it, disembark upon the shores of the same waters which wafted over the invading forces of Julius Cæsar and of William the Conqueror, an army irresistible by any British force which could be mustered in any time likely to be allowed for that purpose. In support of this the British admiral insists that the changes which have been made in the conditions of naval warfare in recent years have tended to weaken Great Britain as against her rivals. Commenting on these articles on the fighting power of Great Britain, the New York World says: "Whether these exhibitions, by a native and a foreign critic, of the actual military condition of the British empire will have any effect remains to be seen. But the condition of Great Britain cannot seem happy or promising to reflecting Englishmen. Its population is in great part fed by the United States. It is an actual condition of the existence of its population that they should extend their markets, and the nation which sells most to them refuses to buy of them. Thence arises the necessity of opening new markets with the sword, and with every new acquisition comes a new source of expense and danger, until the navy is scattered all over the world looking after British interests, and an army, in the sense in which the soldiers of continental Europe use the word, does not exist. That Great Britain should obtain 'Peace with Honor' it seems requisite that Great Britain should not go to war."

Remarkably transparent is the motive of the Sunday paper which professes just now such intense devotion to the democratic party. It fears "the party" will be utterly ruined unless a "straight democratic ticket" be nominated for the city election; not however, from belief that any party principle or measure can possibly be in issue, nor from the least shadow of expectation that any "straight democratic ticket" could be elected. What then? This assumed democratic zeal arises solely from a fear that a so-called republican ticket, which is going to be run by the ring in whose interest the said Sunday paper is controlled, will not be elected. If there were a chance of electing democratic candidates the said Sunday paper would be lukewarm and indifferent, if not in active opposition. In now clamoring for a democratic ticket it is simply serving by indirection, though in a most transparent way, the interests of those who are going to bring out a ring ticket in the name of the republican party, and who keep it, in the poor disguise of a democratic paper, to help them by these diversions. The expedient is not likely to be of much avail. Better no artifice than one too transparent.

At a recent trial of electricity as a propelling power for railway cars, near Berlin, a speed of eighteen miles an hour was attained; and it is said this would have been exceeded but for the mandate of the authorities prohibiting greater speed. The electric battery was concealed between the wheels of the cars. Enough is known of this experiment to warrant the world in indulging in wonderful visions of the coming time when all the great railways of the world will be operated by means of an agent the uses of which are but now beginning to be recognized. The first steam railway was a greater prodigy than the first electric railway. At a recent meeting of the London society of arts Prof. Perry, a noted electrician, painted a most alluring picture of the future of this wondrous agent whose subtle power, he claimed, would soon be subdued to all the uses in which steam can be employed, and many more. The London Standard believes that coal-driven engines are likely to be entirely superseded in another fifty years by electric ones.

Villard notwithstanding, Puget Sound may yet become a railroad terminus. A scheme is now proposed which would make it the "terminus" of the entire globe. A new Alexander, with an eye and genius for the conquest of worlds, appears in the person of Col. Arthur Herbert, a native of Illinois, who proposes to build a line of railroad along the northern coast from Puget Sound to Behring's straits, tunnel the straits or transfer trains by ferry (only thirty-seven miles), then push on through Siberia, cross the great Amoor river, traverse China and all the states of Central Asia on to the Caspian, or further south to the capital of Persia, bridging the Bosphorus and continuing on through Central Europe to London, etc. The little branch railroad across from Tacoma to Snake river may well be given up as a thing of no consequence in comparison with this magnificent prospect.

A Boston paper is authority for the statement that a gentleman to whom on one occasion Senator Sumner had spoken with feeling and freedom of his sense of the injustice that was done to him ventured to suggest that the legislature of Massachusetts was in session, and, if he should appeal to that body for a vote of confidence by resigning his seat in the senate, he could rally the public sentiment of the state in a way that would show that Massachusetts still trusted his patriotism and fidelity to the great principles of the party in spite of his differences with the Grant administration. Mr. Sumner turned quickly in his chair and replied with some severity in his tone: "That, sir, would be an act of demagogism unworthy of a senator."

A discharged private soldier who has served ten years in the Indian country has given no bad clew to the solution of the Indian problem in these words: "The right thing to do with the Indian is to use a little gentle force, and take away his blanket. Then he can use his hands, and can chop wood and hoe corn like a white man or a negro; but as long as he is permitted to wear a blanket instead of a blouse, his hands are of no use except to keep the blanket in place." There is philosophy in that. When the Indian has been taught to use his hands, then send him the school master. Labor is the condition precedent to all else in this world.

"The wealth of the world will be found in New Mexico and Arizona," said Baron Alexander Von Humboldt, many years ago, before the adventurous American mining prospector had invaded that part of the world. Judged by the present developments, and the interest awakened in all parts of the country by leading capitalists of New York, Boston and other eastern cities, the baron was a prophet. As shown by reports from careful newspaper correspondents within the last few weeks, many of the shrewdest eastern capitalists are now directing a considerable portion of their attention to the copper mines of Arizona and New Mexico.

Robert R. Shaw, of Buckingham county, Virginia, has in his possession a cannon ball weighing eighteen pounds, which was thrown into the American lines during the siege of Yorktown in 1781 and taken home by Mr. Shaw's grandfather, a soldier of the revolution who was present at the siege and surrender of Cornwallis. It has been a cherished relic in the Shaw family for nearly one hundred years, and will be exhibited at the Yorktown centennial in October next.

Railway Commissioner French stated while here a few days since, that the rails had been ordered by the Union Pacific company for the whole extension from Green river to Baker City. This entire line, Mr. French says, will be completed by the end of the year 1882.

Conkling feels that the New York legislature is not at his command, and since he is certainly out of a job there is nothing left for him but the lecture field.

MONDAY MORNING, MAY 30, 1881.

CITY.

THE FLEETWOOD'S TRIAL TRIP.—Saturday morning the little propeller Fleetwood made her trial trip, which must be recorded as successful in every detail respect. Leaving the wharf at the foot of Morrison street, the Fleetwood steamed up nearly opposite Ross' Island and then turned her prow down stream. She ran under a good head of steam and reached the Columbia and sighted Vancouver in just [illegible] minutes from the time she started, the run being [illegible] miles and a half. On the return trip the Fleetwood made the distance in 60 minutes against a strong head wind. Under favorable circumstances the little propeller can make 15 knots an hour. The Fleetwood is 115 feet long, with 19 feet width of beam. Her engines were made at Honeyman's foundry and are 10 inch stroke. There are two cabins, both elegantly upholstered, and everything about the boat is arranged with regard to economy and utility. The steamer has a carrying capacity for [illegible] passengers and can carry 50 tons of freight. The Fleetwood will run to the Cascades, where she will connect with the Gold Dust for The Dalles. Capt. U. B. Scott will have command of the Fleetwood. Mr. G. Cox will be purser and Henry Deake, engineer.

COMING WEST.—Rev. A. E. Fridrichsen has a copy of the Norden, a weekly Norwegian paper published in Chicago, under date of May 18th. This paper contains a telegram from New York, dated May [illegible], which states that a contract has been closed with [illegible] of the steamship lines between Norway and England to carry [illegible] emigrants to the latter country. From England most of the emigrants will come to America this year. [illegible] on account of the good reports of the far west, Oregon will [illegible] for a good share of these emigrants.

HAND AMPUTATED.—Mrs. Myers, one of the pioneers of Oregon, residing on the corner of Seventh and F streets, has for some time past been afflicted with a cancer on her right hand and to such an extent has it been spreading that life was despaired of. Amputation was deemed necessary to save the lady's life and Saturday afternoon the operation was skillfully performed by Drs. J. W. Oliver and G. H. Davis. Mrs. Myers is [illegible] years of age and stood the operation remarkably well. At last accounts the lady was resting comfortably.

MEETING OF COMMITTEE.—Saturday evening a meeting was held by the democratic city committee at the council chamber. Messrs. Norden, Gerdes, [illegible] and Kelly being present in person and Mr. [illegible] Norris being represented by Byron Z. Holmes as proxy. After considerable discussion of matters relative to the position of the party in the coming city election it was determined to take no action looking to a call of a city convention until later or perhaps after the republicans make their nominations.

CHURCH BEING RAISED.—The Scandinavian Evangelical Lutheran church of East Portland has been raised several feet above the ground for the purpose of putting in a brick basement. The thanks of the church and pastor, the Rev. A. E. Fridrichsen, are due to Mr. J. D. Partridge, contractor, of Portland, for the free use of his tools and apparatus for moving buildings. Liberal contributions towards paying the expense incurred in the improvement have been received from the citizens of Portland.

ATTACHED.—Deputy Sheriff Caywood, on complaint of Capt. Tom Mountain, attached on Saturday, a number of articles in possession of the Portland Light Battery. Capt. Mountain claims that the sum of $132 is due him from the company, which the latter declines to liquidate; also that a number of caps, belts, sabres, flags, etc., now being used by the battery, belong to him personally. Deputy Sheriff Caywood, not being able to open the door of the armory, effected an entrance through one of the windows.

NEW JUDGES' STAND.—The executive committee of the Oregon State Agricultural Society have concluded to build a new judges' stand at the race track on the state fair grounds. It will be three stories high; the first story for weighing room, the second for reporters and the third for the judges. It will be placed about ten feet back from the location of the old one. This is an improvement which has long been needed, and one that the press of the state will appreciate.

THE REPORTED SALE DENIED.—In answer to telegraphic inquiry from Mr. J. M. Fillmore, superintendent of the Oregonian Railway Company, limited, Mr. Reid answered from New York Saturday that no sale had been made, and that all reports to that effect could be denied on his authority. Mr. Reid sailed for Scotland Saturday afternoon.

DIED SUDDENLY.—On the down trip last Saturday from the upper Columbia river there was a party of Chinamen. In coming over the portage at the Cascades one of the Chinamen suddenly died. His body was brought to this city on the Cascade boat. It is supposed to be a case of heart disease.

SOLD OUT.—Sheriff Buchtel sold on Saturday the balance of the late Portland Transfer Co., including wagons, harness, etc. They brought fair prices for a forced sale, but the finest wagon that cost new $[illegible] and was in good order, brought only $300.

BOUND OUT.—A dispatch from Astoria yesterday evening states that the bark Herbert Black, bound for the United Kingdom, crossed the bar Saturday afternoon.

L STREET.—Property owners on L street in East Portland from Fourth street down to the railroad, have arranged to have the bridgeway reached with good three-inch planks, 22 feet long.

STATE CIRCUIT COURT.—The State Circuit Court adjourned last Friday until to-morrow morning at 9 o'clock. Jurors and attorneys should bear this fact in mind.

THROUGH TO MONMOUTH.—Commencing Wednesday, the Oregonian Railway Company limited, will run passenger and freight trains to Monmouth, Polk county.

EXCURSIONS TO VANCOUVER.

The excursion given by the Ladies' Guild of St. Paul's church, Oregon City, is for a charitable purpose and deserves to be successful. The Guild has spared no expense to make the ride enjoyable and the ceremonies and military parade were gotten up at their request by the officers in charge of the military cemetery at Vancouver. Their boat, the Lurline, leaves foot of Alder street at 9:30 this morning. Every arrangement has been made to insure the safety and comfort of passengers.

The steamer Washington will leave the wharf this morning at 9:30, at the foot of Morrison street, for Vancouver and also at 3 P. M. Returning, the steamer will leave Vancouver at 5 P. M. The excursion will afford an opportunity of witnessing the decoration ceremonies at Vancouver.

CRICKET MATCH.

This afternoon at 1 P. M. precisely, wickets will be pitched for a full game on the South Portland grounds. In view of being a holiday and the near approach of the match with the Victoria club it is earnestly desired that there be a full attendance. The sides will be as follows:

DECORATION SUNDAY.

Services at the First Congregational Church—Sermon by Rev. J. A. Cruzan.

A very large audience assembled at the First Congregational Church last night, the occasion being special services in memory of the fallen soldiers. So great was the attendance that hundreds were unable to gain admission. The chancel was beautifully draped with flags, and in front of the altar were two stacks of guns, along with other military accoutrements. The musical services were excellent, all the choral numbers being well rendered, Mr. Miller sang "Father, in Thee," by Millard, and Mr. McClure gave the song of "The Star Spangled Banner" in fine style. Rev. J. A. Cruzan delivered the following sermon, which was listened to with intense interest:

DISCOURSE SERMON.

Ex. 12:14. "And this day shall be unto you for a memorial."

In the presence of great events, great actions, great heroism, great magnanimity, man instinctively seeks to embody his grateful and profound emotions in some significant and lasting memorial. [illegible] this desire in man. The Bible is full of divinely appointed memorials. The great facts of Jewish and Christian faith are symbolized, memorialized. The Jew had his Passover, his Feast of Tabernacles, his Feast of Pentecost; the Christian his Christmas, his Lord's Supper, his Sabbath. These are divinely appointed memorial days. And we all see the fitness of them. As Americans we have two memorial days—the Fourth of July—Independence Day, when our nation was born, and the 30th of May—Decoration Day—when we celebrate the passage of our nation thro' that Red Sea of blood, by which she was made in fact as well as name, a free people! A day which more than others the devotion, the heroic courage and the deathless valor of the patriot dead! The sentiments of Decoration Day strike a responsive chord in every patriot heart. Nay, it sweeps the heart-strings with a touch of tenderness unknown to other memorial days, and even the Fourth of July. It has less of [illegible] and more of real glory. It flatters less our vanity, and challenges more our manhood. It [illegible] true patriotism. It recalls us annually to consider what the nation cost and what it is worth. It takes us back to the days, days of '61 and '62 and '63—when the life of the nation trembled in the balance, and destruction seemed certain. This nation prized her [illegible]. It takes us back to the other year of victory and of the sound of peace, when our armies came marching home. How the nation greeted [illegible] honor, and honor [illegible]

> "Did you see them [illegible] that day,
> Marching down the broad highway?
> Did you hear the [illegible] drum,
> And the people shout, 'They come!'
> It was my [illegible] had seen,
> Seen that city's multitude,
> On their front, their rear, their flanks
> Pressing in their very ranks!
> Gods! methinks you would have spared
> Half to have shared,
> All the swelling thoughts that then
> Met the swarthy battle-men!"

While the heavens were yet partially covered with that storm cloud which had rained blood for four long years the nation's heart was very tender, and it was enshrined every dead hero and every living veteran. Decoration Day is needed to keep the nation in remembrance of these things. It is fitting that once each year, at least, this nation should pause in its blind, headlong race after wealth, should face toward the past, and the great debt it owes the brave men who saved it at the cost of their lives, and then make a holy pilgrimage to its soldiers' graves, and with bared heads and tear-filled hearts, stand in the presence of the Unseen and make due acknowledgement of its gratitude.

Men say: "Decoration Day will soon lose cease to be observed. It will die out as the soldiers drop into their graves; and as the years take us farther away from the war." I do not believe it. When the feeling which makes Decoration Day sacred dies out of the hearts of our people, then will the nation die also! She will no longer deserve to live. But the nation will never forget those men who fought for it, and those who died for it. It will gladly, every year, rise up to do them honor. Because these dead men—whose graves we shall decorate to-morrow—and these living men who fought with them—are worthy of honor. They are great men.

I. They are great in their character. Never was there a nobler army than that which fought for union and freedom!

Who was the union soldier? The American citizen—trained in the free school, in the free church—and in the free republic; from his cradle breathing the air of civil and religious liberty, standing in his strong manhood, a peer among men—counting no one his master save his God.

The union soldier—who was he? He was the husband and father, who, tried to love the old flag, left the plow in the furrow, the saw on the bench, the key in the forge; and kissing wife and children, marched forth to die for country. He was the son and lover; the plain, shy, beardless boy, whose heart beat warm for his fatherland, and who felt, though he could not say it, with the old flag-bearer of Waterloo, "I could not love thee, dear, so much, loved I not honor more."

The union soldier? He was the old, the middle-aged and the young. He carried a bayonet that thought; his gun, loaded with a principle, brought down not a man, but a system.

I do not think that the nation sufficiently honors these men. They enshrine some favorite general in their hearts. Like the wounded soldier of the first Napoleon, struck near the heart, the surgeon was probing for the ball, when the old veteran said, "Probe a little deeper, sir, and you'll touch the Emperor." In the hearts of our people, and you will touch some idolized chieftain. It may be the gallant Howard, the very soul of honor; it may be the modest Meade, whose eternal monument is Gettysburg; it may be the chivalrous Sherman, whose great sword cleft the confederacy in twain, from Atlanta to the sea; it may be "Fighting Joe Hooker," capturing victory above the clouds at Lookout mountain; it may be the electrifying Sheridan, who woke at Winchester to the roar of defeat, and sleeps at Fisher Hill to the music of victory; or it may be the iron duke, Grant, whose military achievements from Donelson to Appomattox rank him with the great captains of history. And these are worthy of all honor. But not they alone. Not alone the generals, starred with rank, should be enshrined in our hearts, but the union soldier—the private, who carried the musket, and bore with patient bravery, born of noble manhood, the heat and burden of the long struggle. I tell you that many a private filled a hero's sphere and then a hero's grave. Greatness was in the ranks as well as in command. It was this greatness, this valor that alone made possible the brilliant deeds of our generals. Every private was a sovereign; he knew no superiors, he had no betters. He was an integral part of the nation. He felt that the blow he struck was for himself. He felt the greatness and responsibility of American citizenship. He feared no peril, he esteemed no price exorbitant which should save the nation. Such men were in the ranks, and gave character to the union army. The great French soldier La Tour D'Auvergne was the hero of many battles, but persisted in remaining in the ranks. Napoleon sent him a sword inscribed, "First among the grenadiers of France!" When he fell on the field of battle, the emperor ordered his heart embalmed and placed in a silver case which he entrusted to the keeping of his company, with the command that his name should be called at every roll-call, and the oldest grenadier respond: "Dead on the field of honor!" One million five hundred thousand D'Auvergnes marched forth from the loyal north. Three hundred thousand are dead on the field of honor. In your own cemetery sleeps a small band of these noble dead. Oh, let us embalm and treasure their valiant hearts. Yearly call over their names. Let some old comrade answer in floral wreath, "Dead on the field of honor." Ah! these men, grand and noble in character, are indeed worthy of a nation's honor.

II. But these men are worthy of honor for the grand work which they did. Their God-given work was three-fold:

1. It was given to them to save our nation from destruction. And for four long years they stood like a wall of fire between the nation and her assassins—between the loyal homes and the hosts which threatened them.

2. Again: It was theirs to demonstrate that free government was not a failure. Fifty years ago, Webster said, "If we fail, popular government is impossible." When in '61 the lurid fires of war were reflected on the western heavens, England's Carlyle said: "A foul chimney is burning itself out over there!" Despotism said: "It is the beginning of the end. Free government is a failure." Tyrants breathed freer as our republic tottered to its fall. And the downtrodden and oppressed throughout the world hid their faces in the dust of despair. But one million five hundred thousand citizen-soldiers reached out their strong hands to stay the tottering temple of liberty. Three hundred thousand brave sons offered their lives upon its altar. Free government is no longer an experiment—it is a fact.

3. It was their grand mission to crush out slavery. Each brave soldier was a Moses called of God. They went down into Egypt—commissioned from on high—and they led out four millions of God's poor to manhood and freedom! Grand was the work which God gave these men to do; and grandly did they do their work.

III. This last thought: These men are worthy of honor because they fought for a grand principle. These men stood for an idea. Like our forefathers at Lexington and Yorktown, they were not simply soldiers. They were defenders of a great God-given truth. It was the same truth which Paul proclaimed on Mars' hill: "God hath made of one blood all nations of men!" The equality of man! This was the grand principle for which they stood, fought, died. Many of our soldiers were not ideals. Some were far from it. But this grand principle was in every heart. And it transformed—transfigured them—even the low, and the base felt its transforming power. In defense of country, and for this grand truth of equality they went forth. They gave all they had, when the country needed all they had to give. This grand idea for which they stood nerved them to meet the shock of battle. In defense of it, bravely they withstood the fearful crash and crush of shell, the murderous hiss of the screaming minnie—hastening to the horrible work of wounding and death! For the sake of that idea they suffered and died. And so I say, for three reasons:

1. Because of the character of the men.
2. Because of their grand work.
3. Because their hearts were nerved by such a grand principle—they are grand men and they are worthy of honor.

Soldiers of the Grand Army of the Republic—comrades of George Wright Post: these fallen ones, whom we have met to honor, gave their lives to save the nation—to make a future of good and of glory possible for their children and for ours. If this land was worth their dying as heroes, is it not worth our living faithfully as men? Every soldier's grave will be eloquent to-morrow. It will speak of the value of our liberties, and the great cost of our free institutions. These dead comrades will tell us that those among us will most honor the dead who most faithfully do their duty by the living state.

Let us strive to honor them by noble, manly, true, clean citizenship. Let us make the Grand Army the rallying-point of the most heroic, the most generous, the most self-sacrificing valor. The Grand Army of the Republic should represent the highwater mark of the nation's life. The Grand Army of the Republic should be—it is—the color-guard of the nation's patriotism. As you stand to-morrow with bowed heads among the graves, and hear voices out of the unseen—give back this answer: "Comrades dead but not gone, honored and beloved, your blood is not as water spilt upon the ground; your sacrifice is not of no avail. Here we gather to refresh our memory of your heroism; to renew our fidelity to the trusts you have laid upon us; to confess again the worth, the power, the inspiration of your patriotism; to make more loyal our faith in the large possibility of your country's future, and to take solemn oath that, so help us God! we will remember; we will be vigilant; we will be loyal to country, to the right, to the truth, to God and to our flag."

THE DAY AT VANCOUVER.

The day will be observed at Vancouver with the customary ceremonies. Hon. J. N. Dolph, of this city, who will deliver the oration, will leave this morning on the steamer for Vancouver. During his brief stay in that place Mr. Dolph will be the guest of Gen. Geo. B. Dandy. On arriving there he will be escorted by Col. Alex Chambers, of the 21st Infantry, to the garrison.

At 11 A. M. the troops will form with side arms only and march to the garrison cemetery, where the oration will be delivered, and the usual ceremonies will be observed.

On the arrival of the excursion boats, the Washington and Lurline, from Portland and Oregon City, they will be met at the wharf by the 21st infantry band and conducted to the cemetery. Col. The steamer Vancouver will leave Vancouver at 6 o'clock this evening for the accommodation of the members of Ellsworth Post, G. A. R., and the garrison and citizens who may desire to witness the very interesting ceremonies of the evening at New Market theater.

THE BRUSH LIGHT.

Progress being made in the Science of Electric Lighting—the Brush Patent Rapidly Superseding all Others.

[From the Alta California.]

The electric light is now a proved success, and no thing since the electric telegraph and telephone has excited more general interest and attention, or has been received with greater favor [illegible]. The general public will be glad to know [illegible] this splendid addition to human comfort and convenience, and it is the purpose of this article to give reliable information [illegible].

Since the time of Volta and Faraday, the problem of using electricity as a clean and practical illuminator has engaged the attention of the best scientific talent in the world. Yet, though many steps in the right direction were taken, the success that was demanded seemed as far off as ever until a day of [illegible] and [illegible] success was possible.

Two things had to be invented. First, a machine that would generate the proper amount and kind of electric current [illegible]. [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] Mr. Brush [illegible] New York [illegible] San Francisco [illegible]

Of course, Mr. Brush's invention [illegible] Professor Moses G. Farmer [illegible] Sawyer and Man [illegible] After this came a hard fight battle between Edward Weston, of Newark, N. J., and T. Von Hefner Alteneck, of Berlin, Germany, on the one hand, and Mr. Brush, who had already obtained his patent, on the other. Weston and Alteneck demanded a contest with Brush in the Patent office, which was granted them. The best legal talent in the country was retained and put into active service and the fight was long and animated, but here, again, Mr. Brush came out successful. Alteneck gave up and withdrew early in the contest, and Weston was forced out because it was proven and decided that his invention was not like Brush's, either in its mechanical construction or the principles of operation. That which Weston sought and failed to gain in this contest was to have his application for a patent so construed as to cover the "shifted dial removing the magnet" that enables Brush to operate any number of lamps upon a single circuit, that the current can supply. Weston's failure in this contest did not, however, deter him from seeking and obtaining another trial upon another invention that Brush had patented. But here he met the same fate as before, and Brush's claims were undisturbed. Now the tables have turned, as Brush and his licensee, the Brush Electric Company, of Cleveland, have brought suit against the agents of Weston, with the complaint that Weston's apparatus is infringing several of Mr. Brush's patents. This suit is pending in the United States court for the southern district of New York.

The features of Brush's patents that differ from others are [illegible] and the copper-coated carbons of the lamp, and the [illegible] the machine, which is driven by a steam engine and generates the electric current. Mr. Brush and the Brush Electric company have done practically all that has been done to develop and introduce the electric light in such a shape as to be commercially successful and easily operated by the unskilled person, and as they are possessed of plenty of money and [illegible] they do not [illegible] to all customers [illegible].

It is said that they have retained [illegible] Dickerson and [illegible] of New York, and George H. Christy, of Pittsburg [illegible] M. D. Leggett & Co., of Cleveland [illegible] Patent News.

The California Electric Light Company [illegible] the Brush Light patent for the Pacific coast [illegible] officers are Wm. Kerr, president; P. B. Cornwall, vice-president and treasurer; [illegible] secretary and business manager.

MONDAY MORNING, MAY 30, 1881.

A MACHINE CATECHISM.

[Albany (N. Y.) Journal.]

Q. What is the dominant duty of a New York republican?

A. To deify Conkling and whoop him up forever.

Q. Are there more New York republican leaders than one?

A. There is but one. His name is Conkling; all others are counterfeit.

Q. Who made the republican party of New York?

A. Conkling. He was its sole maker even as he is its sole preserver and proprietor.

Q. Is there anything to the republican party of New York apart from him?

A. There is not. He always puts it in his breeches' pocket when he starts for Washington, and there it is incarcerated until he returns to Utica.

Q. What was the idea of the framers of the Constitution in providing a president for the United States?

A. Their idea, so far as New York is concerned, simply was to furnish an official to bestow patronage upon Conkling.

Q. What is the whole duty of a statesman?

A. To harvest as much patronage as possible.

Q. Why is this thus?

A. Because on patronage he lives, moves and has his being.

Q. What do you understand by the appointing power of the president?

A. The power to appoint men whom the senate boycotts him into appointing.

Q. What do you understand by the phrase, "By and with the advice and consent of the senate?"

A. "Advice" and "consent" are used as synonymous with demand and dictation.

Q. What is meant by "the courtesy of the senate"?

A. A synonym for discourtesy to the president.

Q. Do you consider a president who was elected by the republican voters of all the states entitled to any respect from the republicans of New York?

A. Not unless Conkling approves of him.

Q. What is the relation which an officeholder bears to the party that elected him—that of servant or that of master?

A. If you mean Conkling, that of sultan.

Q. Is Conkling willing to be conciliated?

A. He is. All that he asks of the president is that he may have his way in all things that pertain to New York.

Q. Could anything be fairer than that?

A. Nothing could be fairer than that.

Q. What is a New York stalwart?

A. A stalwart is a republican who makes fidelity to Conkling rather than fidelity to party principles the end of political action.

Q. What is your opinion of Judge Robertson?

A. He is a man whose head ought forthwith be placed on a charger and forwarded to Conkling express charges paid.

Q. Is not Robertson a man of the highest character?

A. Yes.

Q. Have not his services to the party and the state been illustrious?

A. Yes.

Q. Are not his intelligence, experience and accomplishments equal to his probity?

A. Yes.

Q. Have not his services during a long period as chairman of the judiciary committee of the senate been of incalculable benefit to the people?

A. Yes.

Q. Why, then, should his head be served upon a charger rather than exalted?

A. Because Conkling does not approve of him.

Q. Had the republican legislature of New York the right to endorse the nomination of Judge Robertson without first finding out from Conkling whether he would condone such action?

A. Clearly not. Its action in this respect was a piece of outrageous impudence and presumption.

Q. Can the legislature be rightfully assassinated for so doing?

A. In equity it can be, but not, perhaps, in law.

Q. What will Conkling do about it?

A. He will place both branches of the legislature in contempt.

Q. What is Blaine?

A. Blaine is the loathsome Lucifer of American politics; a cross-eyed pelican of perdition; a pestiferous pirate; an unconscionable freebooter; a human blizzard; an incarnate pesthouse; a rectangular parallelopipedon.

Q. Why do you thus characterize Blaine?

A. Because Conkling does not approve of Blaine.

Q. What is a New York anti-machine republican?

A. It is a republican who, taking issue with the stalwarts, is opposed to changing the name of New York to Conklingville, and who does not refer to Conkling when he speaks of the Supreme Being.

Q. What would become of such a republican if the machine millenium had arrived?

A. He would be dashed to pieces like a potter's vessel and his remains would be ground finer than granulated sugar.

Q. Are not the terms which Conkling proposes to Garfield perfectly fair?

A. Indeed they are. No terms could be fairer.

Q. What are those terms?

A. Heads I win, tails you lose.

Q. Does Conkling approve of one George Washington?

A. He does not.

Q. Why does he not?

A. Because Washington endorsed a certain declaration of independence.

Q. Does not Conkling believe in declarations of independence?

A. No. Oh no. He entirely disapproves of them.

Q. What sort of declarations does Mr. Conkling approve of?

A. Declarations of subserviency to the machine.

PART II.

Q. What do you understand by harmony?

A. Harmony is the right and duty which those who don't agree with us have of yielding to our demands.

Q. Is Mr. Conkling for harmony?

A. He just yearns for it.

Q. Give an illustration of his anxiety for harmony.

A. He is so solicitous for harmony that he is laboring to have Robertson rejected to the end that it may be fully attained.

Q. What is the proper attitude to assume toward bolters and kickers?

A. For bolters and kickers we have only immeasurable abhorrence, disgust and condemnation.

Q. What is a bolter and a kicker?

A. A bolter and a kicker is a person who declines to support a regular party nomination.

Q. Is Mr. Conkling, therefore, to be set down as a bolter and a kicker, since he declines to support the nomination of Robertson?

A. He is not, since the president's nomination of Robertson was not regular.

Q. Why was it not regular?

A. The fact that it was not agreeable to Mr. Conkling personally made it glaringly irregular.

Q. Is everything that is done by or in relation to the republican party in New York that does not suit him to a shade to be regarded as irregular?

A. It is.

Q. What is Conkling's opinion of the legislators and newspapers that entertained the conviction that Robertson ought to be confirmed until he reached for his whip with lead in its handle and a bad sting in its long snapper?

A. He condones their rashness in presuming to have convictions not of his manufacture because of their subsequent surrender of their convictions on the altar of subserviency.

Q. Isn't that real nice of Conkling?

A. It is indeed real nice of Conkling.

Q. What do you understand by the phrase making war on Conkling?

A. Making war on Conkling is taking political action which is not in accord with his individual wishes.

Q. Did the Chicago convention make war on Conkling when it set aside the unit rule?

A. It did.

Q. Did the Chicago convention make war on Conkling when it decided against a third term?

A. It did.

Q. Did the Chicago convention make war on Conkling when it declined to nominate his candidate?

A. It did.

Q. Did the Chicago convention make war on Conkling when it chose James A. Garfield as its standard-bearer?

A. It did.

Q. Has the Chicago convention ever apologized to Conkling for such conduct?

A. It never has.

Q. Will Conkling ever condone the Chicago convention?

A. He never will.

Q. What grounds have you for saying he never will?

A. Because his opposition to Robertson's confirmation is largely based on the fact that Robertson made war on him by opposing the unit rule, by opposing the third term, by opposing the nomination of the Conkling candidate in the Chicago convention.

Q. Would the president have been justified in withdrawing the name of Robertson?

A. He would have been for two reasons.

Q. State those two reasons.

A. In the first place the withdrawal would have produced harmony (Conkling pattern) in the party, and, in the second place, Conkling might have been pleased to regard it as in the nature of a reproof of those who made war on him by voting against Grant at Chicago.

Q. Was the president justified in withdrawing the other New York nominations?

A. He certainly was not.

Q. Why not?

A. Because such action had a tendency to hurt Mr. Conkling's feelings.

Q. What ought he to have done?

A. Well, he ought not to have resorted to such dreadfully extreme measures.

Q. Conkling resorts to extreme measures to gain his ends, does he not?

A. Undoubtedly.

Q. Why, then, should the president be debarred from employing measures of corresponding vigor?

A. The answer is plain. In all [illegible] does he is protected by the courtesy of the senate. The president [illegible] such superb excuse for aggressive action.

Q. State, then, what course the president ought to have adopted in lieu of withdrawing the New York nominations?

A. The best answer we can give is suggested in the old nursery verse:

"There was an old woman said how
Shall I soften the heart of this cow?
I will sit on the stile
And continue to smile,
Which may soften the heart of this cow."

Q. In other words, the president, instead of withdrawing the New York nominations which he did withdraw, ought to have withdrawn the nomination of Robertson and supplemented such action by smiling kindly and sweetly upon Conkling?

A. Yes, that is the sort of presidential policy in regard to New York nominations which would have met with our cordial approbation.

REPUBLICAN OR COSSACK?

Indications of a Coming Storm which will Set[illegible]

[From the New York Evening Post.]

It is sixty years since Napoleon Bonaparte died, and Europe is neither republican nor Cossack.

The signs are, however, very ominous. For a time a general outbreak may still be put off. But in the near future such convulsion is all but certain. There have been, indeed, various national spasms and throes during those sixty years. There have been wars and rumors of wars, and more than one dynastic change. But there has never been a moment when the tokens of impending storm have brooded so unmistakably and so widely over Europe as they now do, since the death of the prophetic exile on his solitary rock at St. Helena.

Russia, to all appearance, is on the eve of revolution. St. Petersburg, it is said, is filled with gloom, and the air, so say the correspondents, is heavy with expectant forebodings. The Czar has shut himself up in a fortress, twenty miles from his capital, whence he sullenly watches the flow of events. The Nihilists grow bolder and bolder, and a member of the revolutionary committee—it may be presumed, after first being carefully searched, and then kept during the interview under strict guard—has actually had the temerity to present to Alexander a manifesto, or ultimatum, setting forth in the name of his society on what terms they will make peace. If it is true, as reported, that after hearing all that this bold messenger had to say, the Czar ordered him to be arrested, the pacification aimed at will scarcely, by this episode, be promoted.

But the clouds do not gather only about the Russian capital. News comes by way of Berlin that grave agitation has broken out in the Baltic provinces. The peasants there, like those of Ireland, want to own the land. The local press, with inexplicable audacity, declares that the government is incapable of contributing to the prosperity of the country. Handbills have been distributed calling on the people to refuse to swear allegiance to the czar. The Lutheran pastors in many parts of Esthland decline to administer that oath. Russian bonds, meanwhile, are going down in London, and the Times of that city yesterday asserted that the fall is due to the fact that serious fears of revolution in Russia are now entertained. English consols do not go down, dark as the prospect is in Ireland. But this is because full faith exists that there is force enough at hand to cope with any disturbances that may arise there rather than because such disturbance is not expected.

If the czar were now to develop signal military genius, if he were able to play the part of a Genghis Kahn or a Tamerlane, the way out of his troubles would be clear. He would, as swiftly as might be, mobilize his vast army. He would crush domestic revolt, make huge levies, and pour an immense invading force into Germany. If he seemed at all likely to prosper—and on our hypothesis, assuming his genius, he would be sure to do so—France, to wrest back her lost provinces, would be safe to join in the fray. Between the upper and the nether millstones the new and imposing empire might thus be ground to powder. But the great czar, who had [illegible] to his standard countless hordes with the promise of plunder, would not then cry a halt. He might resolve to avenge Moscow on Paris. Constantinople he might seize by a flank movement and in a single campaign; and, all-powerful then as the Corsican was at the dawn of the century, the nations would be prostrate at the feet of the czar, the augury of Napoleon would be fulfilled and Europe would be "Cossack."

But if this is not to be, if Alexander is not of the stuff to make a conqueror and no other figure looms up in Russia to weld and wield her vast forces and to stave off liberty or disintegration by foreign war, the alternative end may be postponed but hardly averted. If Russia is revolutionized, the German empire will not long stand. With free institutions on both sides of her, the Fatherland would no longer be without them. And thus, if not "Cossack," Europe would almost straightway become "republican." It would have seemed to most minds over-daring, if not visionary, to indulge in these forecasts during the time of him whom Victor Hugo called Napoleon the Little. But events have moved fast since then, and the prophecy of Napoleon the Great apparently nears its fulfillment.

Simon Cameron and Don Quixote.

[From the Philadelphia Press.]

Speaking of this book Gen. Cameron once said to me: "Besides being the first literary work I ever had to read, it was illustrated. I was about ten years of age, and if you have ever seen a boy of that age, with a natural appetite for devouring everything in the shape of printed matter, get down to a book with pictures in it, you may imagine with what zest I addressed myself to that fascinating work, snatching moments from labor and devoting all play time to it until the last page was read, and then wondering what it was all about, and beginning again at the first and reading it all over."

"I remember very well," said he, "that I thought it was either a great history or a great lie. Of course I could not see the satire in it, but I was firmly settled on one point—that if I had been Don Quixote, Sancho Panza would have died within a week, and if I had been Sancho Panza, I would not have served such a fool as Don Quixote."

[illegible]

King of the Blood

[illegible] is a blood purifier and tonic, known by different names, [illegible] there are [illegible] according to effects, but being really branches or phases of that great generic disorder, Impurity of Blood, such as Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Liver Complaint, Constipation, Nervous Disorders, Headache, Backache, General Weakness, Heart Disease, Dropsy, Kidney Disease, Piles, Rheumatism, Catarrh, Scrofula, Skin Disorders, Pimples, Ulcers, Swellings, &c., &c. King of the Blood prevents and cures these by attacking the cause, Impurity of the Blood. Chemists and physicians agree in calling it the most genuine and efficient preparation for the purpose. Sold by Druggists, $1 per bottle. See testimonials, directions, &c., in pamphlet, "Treatise on Diseases of the Blood," wrapped around each bottle.

45 Years Before the Public.

THE GENUINE

DR. C. McLANE'S

CELEBRATED

FOR THE CURE OF

Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint,

DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them a FAIR TRIAL.

For all bilious derangements, and as a simple purgative, they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Every box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

The genuine McLANE'S LIVER PILLS bear the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrappers.

Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.
